FIGURING OUT YOUR #CAREERGOALS

Congratulations! You've found our handy-dandy career pathway! This infographic is specifically designed to give Anthropology students a brief guide on some popular careers out there and how to jump into them. Helpful links to alternative sites with more in depth information are available throughout. Please don't hesitate to explore!

But first, what is Anthropology?

That's a good question! Anthropology is the study of humanity. That broad topic includes the development and interactions of different cultures and social systems, the physical evolution of human beings, and the study of prehistoric cultures. At UC Davis the Anthropology major is broken up into three different tracks:

1) Sociocultural (A.B.)
2) Evolutionary (A.B.)
3) Evolutionary (B.S.)

and more importantly, what can I do with it?

Each track is geared towards a slightly different career path, but (thankfully) there is tons of overlap and flexibility! Check out some of these real world examples!

I have a goal, now what?

1. Investigate

Each career has different requirements necessary to apply. Do some research and learn exactly what your chosen career requires! Some common prerequisites for a job include:

- Specific GPA
- Qualifying Exam
- Further Education
- Prerequisite Classes
- Relevant Experience

2. Accomplish

Once you’ve found exactly what you need to apply, you can start accomplishing them! UC Davis has a plethora of resources specifically designed to help students with career placement, prerequisites, and experience. Below are only a few examples.

3. Gear Up

You've finished your prerequisites, your GPA is strong, but now you have to enter the real world. What do you do? Depending on your career goal, your path may differ:

- Professional school!
- Academic
- Business
- Government
- Nonprofit
- Health

Cultural Resource Management

CRM is a strong career path in which Evolutionary track students are typically equipped to venture into. CRM specifically focuses on discovering and preserving culturally significant material goods and locations through the utilization of archaeological techniques. CRM positions are designed so that cultural heritage may be preserved in the face of new development and ever changing federal and state legislation.

Sociocultural Anthropology students are strong candidates for career options that specifically deal with the diverse and internationalized world, today. A Foreign Service Officer is a U.S. diplomat that has extensive education in social and cultural contexts. Utilizing the education a Foreign Service Officer has an excellent option for Anthropology students given the cultural skills gained through the Anthropology curriculum.

Medicine

Medicine is a very common career path that many UC Davis Anthropology majors (particularly the Bachelors of Science track) decide to pursue. With our B.S. program, many medicine pre-requirements are accomplished. These fields are an excellent option for students interested in science, public welfare, and higher education. Though the Anthropology B.S. track does satisfy many requirements, please visit the Health Professions Advising to ensure that all prerequisites courses are occurred correctly. Each field of medicine has a wide variety of prerequisites that must be completed before continuing on to higher education.

Graduate School vs. the Work Force

1. Prepare Your Resume

Job hunting can be stressful. There are so many odds and ends, a plethora of jobs to apply to, and uncertainty all around. Have no fear! Pro Tip: The Internship and Career Center on campus is open to alumni and active UC Davis students. Special advisors are there to help craft a killer resume that is unique to each job you apply for!

2. Fill Out Additional Forms

Before you can say “done” don’t forget to review each position’s application requirements. Some job openings require:

- Cover Letter
- Supplemental Applications

3. Sharpen Interview Skills

Your last step in the job hunt is the interview! Don’t be shy, remember to make eye contact, and check out the ICC!
